 Four members of the Worcester (Massachusetts) Unemployment Action Group pose for a photo in the soup kitchen where they hold weekly meetings, the day after their successful Labor Day street theater action.

The day before this photo, six members of the group snuck into the state's largest Labor Day parade, in Marlborough, Massachusetts, and carried this hand-painted banner one and a half miles in view of several thousand people. The team handed out approximately seven hundred flyers, chanted for jobs and asked parade viewers to "Tell the politicians we need jobs now!"

By good luck, the group managed to grab a leading position in the parade, preceding the state's two candidates for U.S. Senate. Members say they failed to register with parade organizers in advance, and obtain a properly assigned parade position, through an unforeseen administrative error.

↑ From the pamphlet:
 Money is a way to do arithmetic with human lives. It is a kind of magical arithmetic that lets us try to represent human relationships and interactions as precise numbers to try to record and weigh our doings properly and fairly. It is used by most practitioners to try to bring secure balanced justice into their lives, but it is used by some to lie (with tall tales, misleading metaphors, masquerade, etc.) and thereby to steal. ...
